Technical and physical support are two important pillars of a comprehensive security strategy. Technical support refers to the use of technological tools and techniques to protect digital assets and information from various threats. This includes implementing access controls, using encryption to protect sensitive data, installing firewalls and intrusion detection systems to monitor network traffic, and deploying antivirus and anti-malware software to protect against malicious attacks. Physical support, on the other hand, involves securing physical assets such as servers, computers, and other devices that store and process sensitive information. This includes using locks, access control systems, security cameras, and alarms to restrict physical access to sensitive areas and detect any unauthorised entry. By combining technical and physical support, organisations can ensure that their assets and information are protected from both digital and physical threats.
